A photographer is choked to death just outside of where a college dance is being held. The body is discovered by Lee Watson (Freddie Stewart), Betty Rogers (June Preisser) and Lee set out to find the culprit, who managed to put a big damper on the Big Dance. When a magazine photographer is found dead on campus, a group of students decide to find out who committed the crime. Copies of Campus Sleuth survive, and are in collectors' hands in truncated form, as well as the UCLA archives: I've not seen THAT copy. The mystery is whether an uncut copy still exists, containing the hayride musical I number featuring Mildred Jorman--Little Miss Cornshucks. It has been cut out of what existing prints I've seen.

This is the only footage known to exist of this colorful and talented blues/vaudeville performer of the 40s and 50s, and a subject I've been writing about and researching. Should a complete copy be available anywhere, I'm very interested in learning about that. this is not a masterpiece for the ages, but anybody's claim, but it contains a valuable performance that needs to survive-and also to be seen.. This film could have used a script doctor. While the initial big band number \(partially reprised at the end\) is good, the other songs aren't, and just serve to slow down the otherwise rapid pace.

Pre-Superman Noel Neill is cute, but doesn't do much. And even the usually reliable character actor Donald MacBride falters, coming across as too pigheaded and obtuse for the district attorney job he supposedly holds.

As to the mystery, the murderer is not obvious. However the rationales are very shaky, when it comes to the murder itself, and the explanations about where and when it was performed. And, finally, why the murderer would be tricked into attempting to kill a supposed witness makes no sense at all, since s/he \(you'll have to guess which\) could have easily fended off any allegations as mistaken because of \(as s/he points out\) a seemingly iron clad alibi.

PS: My copy doesn't have the missing song number either. a5c7b9f00b
