The director of Ebn-E-Batuta talks on the movie and more...

Tell us something about the storyline

In short it's a sci-fi film set in Punjab. The story is about the encounter between villagers and two aliens who happens to be present at that place. With no big names, it's a simple film that aims to put across a message and present a different visual experience.

Why did you go for a sci-fi film as a debut?

I wanted to do something different, moving away from the debts of mainstream Bollywood genres. Sci-fi as a concept drew my attention. My film gives out a social message about global warming and ways to counter it packaged in the special effects format. I guess there are too many people to make romantic and action flicks so I preferred to start distinctively.

How did you go about the research?

Almost a year and a half went into pre-production, organization of production techniques and collection of funds. I have a professional editor in film so am quite sound about the technical aspects. That helped me to invest at the right place and offer a quality product considering computer graphics and special effects are hugely expensive these days.

How come Water Entertainment happened?

I knew Dev from the times I was an editor in films. He wanted to make a film and the concept got my interest. Instead of going for multiple collaborations we decided to associate under a production banner of our own and make cinema that we believe in. That's how Water Entertainment came into being and after Ebn E Batuta, we are planning a crime film.
